Launch playbook

Growth, content and go-to-market ideas for rE, built from public information and independent research.

> Working assumption: the launch product is a mid-segment percussive massager. Anything in [brackets] still needs confirming.

<60
days to launch, as rE has said publicly

₹5,241 Cr
India massage equipment market, 2025

9.5%
a year, expected market growth (CAGR)

brands benchmarked, four Indian and one global

The waitlist page is a good start. Visitors can only read it.

What's there now

The headline “Your body has a thing or two to say”, a tick-list (train hard, 10-hour days, soreness, no breaks), the line about the body collecting its debt, and an email box. The product stays hidden, which keeps people curious.

What's missing

Nothing shows visitors their own problem, or a number. There's no reason to send the page to anyone.

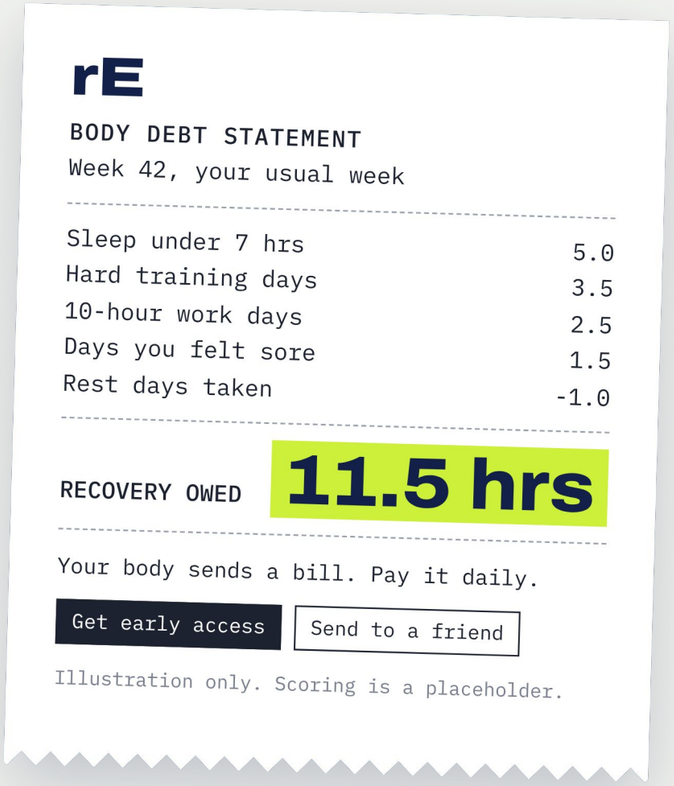

Why a calculator

People act on a risk they can feel. Insurers sell the fear of what could go wrong, not the policy. A calculator shows the problem before any product appears.

The fix: a Body Debt Calculator

1. Set a normal week
   Sliders for sleep, hard training days, work hours, sore days and rest days.
2. Get a Body Debt Statement
   A bill-style result with one headline number, like “11.5 hrs owed”.
3. Pick a next step
   Send it to a friend, or “rE is here to fix this. Drop your email for early access.”
4. Email captured
   Right when the need feels strongest.

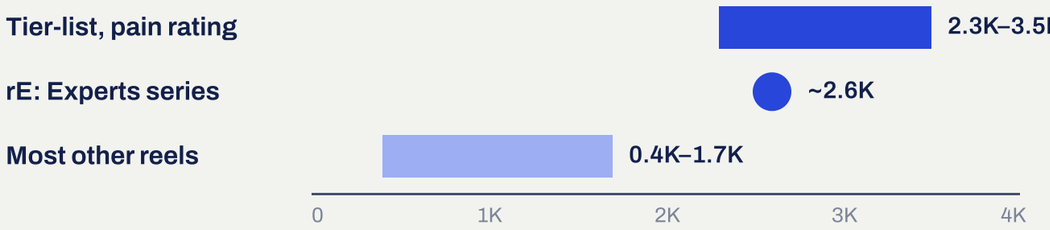

Prototype status: concept only. Next, base the scoring on published sleep and training-load guidance, then test the share card.

More voices, sharper hooks, steadier posting

LinkedIn reaches a corporate crowd that already knows the founders. Instagram has the biggest consumer reach. Neither needs a rethink, just more volume across organic, paid and offline.

Instagram reel views so far

Bars show the range of views per reel. The two teaching formats already beat everything else.

Instagram	What to do
Keep	The lime-and-blue look, the editing, topics that teach (calf pain, desk posture, recovery routines)
Fix	Talking-head reels open with the explanation. Open with a hook in the first 2–3 seconds instead: a crash, a bold claim, a visual jolt. Try trend replies, the way Swiggy does.
Scale	A weekly tier-list series with a new audience each week: runners, desk workers, gym-goers
System	Hook and script before every shoot, A/B hooks, keyword captions, mixed formats, creator collabs

Voice	Who	What it gives rE
Team	Founder and employee posts. Keep going.	Authentic, and free
Creators	LinkedIn creators, corporate wellness and fitness people	Other people talk about rE, not only the team
Partners	Partner brands give their best offer, rE ships it with early orders. Two pre-launch posts each.	Their sample goes in every box. rE reaches a new audience.

Off/Beat

~6 mo

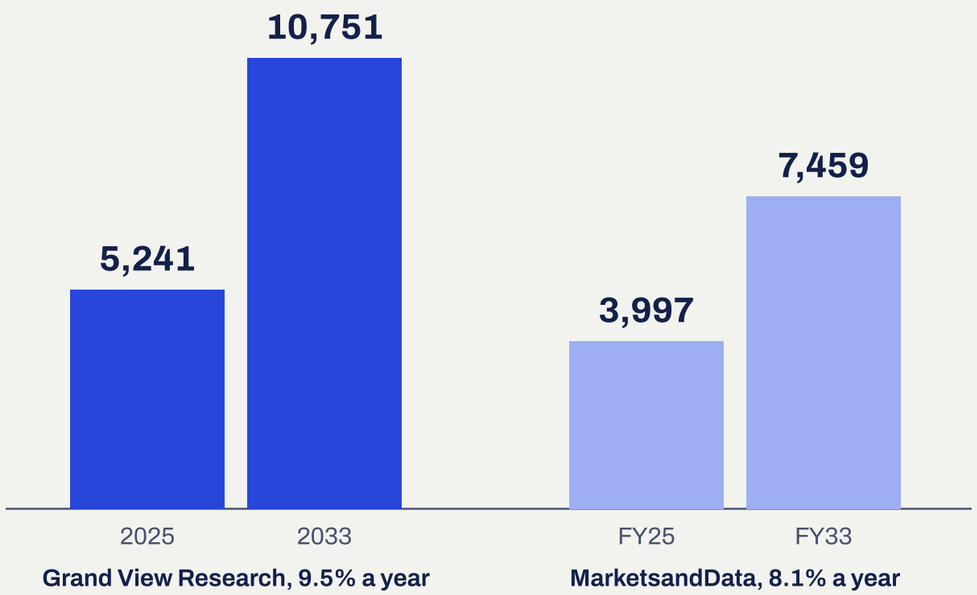

public, no product yet

Aman Gupta's venture has shown no product for about six months, yet the startup crowd knows it. Curiosity alone can carry awareness. rE's own teaser (“Before we tell you what we're building”) points the same way. What's left is posting more often, in more places.

A ₹5,241 Cr market where discounts move the volume

India massage equipment market, ₹ crore

Both estimates roughly double the market in under a decade.

Drivers: rising incomes, urban stress, long screen hours, more interest in non-invasive pain relief.

Where it grows: chairs and sofas earn the most, but massage guns and handhelds are among the fastest growing, pushed by sports recovery and home pain relief.

Amazon listings, units bought in the past month

Hyperice 4.3★ · 801 reviews	₹13,990 MRP ₹18,990, 26% off	Not shown

Volume follows discount depth and review count, not brand loyalty.

A rough proxy: one listing per brand, Amazon India, October 2026.

Sources: Grand View Research, MarketsandData, Amazon India listings

Five brands, five identities, one shared complaint

	Cult	Lifelong	AGARO	Dr Physio	Hyperice
Audience	Gym-goers, runners	Families, office workers, seniors	Urban self-care shoppers	People with pain, rehab	Elite athletes, high earners
Positioning	Post-workout recovery	Everyday comfort (“Fight Lazy”)	Spa at home	Clinical, doctor-backed	Pro-grade performance tech
How they market	“Train Hard, Recover Smart”, light humour, Cult.fit app and centres	Milind Soman, metro and outdoor ads, Amazon and Flipkart sales	Discount pop-ups, WhatsApp, SEO, Meta and Google video ads	Medical terms (TENS, EMS, Shiatsu), physio endorsements, search ads	League deals, athlete-investors (Kohli, 2021), gym and clinic installs, app
Reviews complain about	Won't power on, missing heads, hard returns	Short life, battery drain, used or incomplete boxes	Battery fade, dead controls, slow support	Early failure, weak battery, warranty hassle	Broken connectors, parts hard to find, price vs life

Borrow from Hyperice

Authority, athlete-investors, placements in gyms and clinics, an app layer. The India version: seed units with trainers, physios and fitness creators.

The gap in every set of reviews

- Early failure
- Battery
- Missing parts
- Slow service
- Price vs life

Where rE can win

Own the daily recovery habit, and back it with a promise: every unit tested, a full box, an easy warranty. Early users become the first reviews. Sell through the waitlist and D2C, then marketplaces, then gyms and clinics. QC, unboxing and service stories double as reels.

Complaints are patterns in a sample of 1–3 star Amazon reviews, not measured failure rates

Recovery is a daily habit, not a luxury.

Every competitor owns a different identity. rE takes the everyday body.

Idea	In practice
Enemy	The “push through it” culture. rE already says “So stop pushing through the pain”.
Shift	Recovery goes from a reward for a few to routine upkeep for everyone, like brushing your teeth.
Tone	Direct, dry, a bit funny. A friend who has seen your week, not a wellness brochure.
Name	rE-set, rE-cover, rE-peat. The name already says repeat, which is what a habit is.

Guardrails

No product reveal or product photos on the waitlist

No medical claims or implied doctor endorsements unless real and approved

Label any made-up number in a visual as an illustration

Go easy on AI imagery. Real people, hands and type work better.

Lead audience

The double-shift body

Trains hard, works 10-hour days, lives with soreness, gets no breaks. The same four lines as the waitlist page. Reachable on LinkedIn (the 10-hour-day professional) and on Instagram (the one who trains).

Supporting persona	Why they matter
Corporate professional	Desk-bound, stiff neck and back, short on time
Gym-goer	Trains most days, soreness is routine
Cyclist or runner	Heavy repetitive load, already has a recovery habit
Weekend cricketer	Shows that serious people recover daily
Doctor or physio	Trust voice. Only as a real collaborator, never an implied endorsement.

Five lines, three steps, and banners that need no product

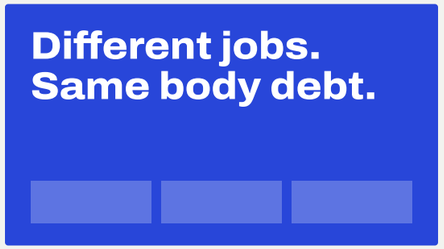

Line	Its job
Kya comfort ek luxury hai?	Campaign hook. Challenges “recovery is a luxury”.
Your body sends a bill. Pay it daily.	Hero line for the waitlist and calculator
Don't wait to hurt. rE-set.	Prevention message. Plays on the name.
Built for bodies that don't get a day off.	Lets the double-shift audience spot themselves
Dard ko aadat mat bana.	Hinglish line for Instagram and shares

Pairing: open with the question, answer with “rE. Recovery is a daily habit.” Show working bodies, not spa shots, so the answer is clearly no.

1. Feel it
   Body debt is real. Show people their own week.
   Calculator, pain-rating reels, short text posts
2. Question it
   Is pain normal? Does rest have to be earned? Is comfort a luxury?
   Banners, LinkedIn text posts, carousels, reels
3. Tease
   “We're building what comes next.” Tagline and website only.
   Offline creatives, partner and creator posts

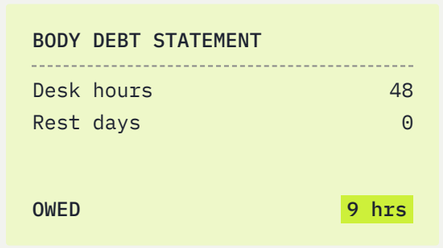

Question banner. Big lime question, logo, site.

Persona banner. Working people in real places.

Type only. No image at all.

Bill look. The calculator's layout, reused.

Question series. Same format, a new ask each week.

Banner thumbnails are layout sketches, not final creative

Hook first, story next, brand last

First 2 seconds

1. Hook

About the viewer, or something unexpected. No logo, name or product.

The middle

2. Story

A short moment people recognise. They feel the problem instead of being told about it.

The last beat

3. Brand

Only as a sign-off: the answer line, the logo or the website.

Hero asset

The AI brand teaser, cut to 6 and 15 seconds. [Video link to be added]

Example hooks

“The exact moment you stand up after 4 hours at your desk.”

“Your neck is B-tier. Until Friday.”

“Everyone told you to push through the pain.”

“POV: you trained at 6am and worked 10 hours.”

The test: if the first seconds could pass for an ad, change the hook.

Organic first, then paid

Post organically and see what people respond to.

Boost the reels that do well with Meta ads.

Drop the weak ones and reuse what you learn.

Trends

Join trends the way Swiggy does, but only when they touch the body, pain, effort or recovery and rE can add its own twist. Skip the rest, even big ones.

LinkedIn

Active BSC team members post from their own profiles, which reach further and feel more credible than a page. Partner brands post from their own handles.

Every competitor site looks like a shop

Brand site	Countdown timer	Coupons	% off badge	Filters	Compare	Few reviews shown
Cult	●	●	–	●	–	–
Hyperice	–	–	●	–	–	–
Lifelong	–	–	●	–	●	●
AGARO	–	●	–	–	–	●

● seen on the site – not noted (not confirmed absent). Cult leads with “Gun Massagers starting at ₹799” and a full sports menu. Hyperice shows “17% off” and US-style “FSA/HSA eligible” tags. Lifelong shows 49–52% off, big MRP cuts and EMI. AGARO runs festival coupon codes and a menu that spans kitchen, car care and oral care.

What all four share

No dedicated recovery brand

Discounts first, story last

Service and warranty tucked into a small bar

Why that leaves room

People buy relief and identity, not specs

At 50–76% off, shoppers stop trusting the MRP [pricing is rE's call]

40 products and 9 filters tire people out

Buyers fear early failure and weak service

rE's site

A brand home, not a store, and it's already built that way. Keep it so: marketplaces handle checkout, the site builds memory and collects emails.

Make rE look like it already has a community

Creators	Why they fit	Collab idea
Gym trainers	Audience trains daily, knows soreness	Rate-my-pain tier-list with the trainer
Physios	Trust and explanation. Real collaborators only.	10-minute reset routine, one body part at a time
Runners, cyclists	Heavy repetitive load, recovery habit	Post-ride “what my body says” reel
LinkedIn desk-work	The 10-hour-day audience	Text post on stiffness by 4pm
Gen-Z humour	Trend-native, easy to share	Trend reply with a body-pain twist

Partners	How it works
Model	One partner per category. Their best offer, for new customers only, ships in early rE orders.
They get	New customers, co-branded content, early exposure
rE asks	Two pre-launch posts on their own handles, plus the offer
Post angle	“Why recovery matters for our customers”: behind the scenes, no ad feel

Real over famous. Story over script. Relevance over reach. One job each.

Check fit and brand safety, start small, give each creator a unique link or code, and put Meta ads behind the best posts. The shortlist is on the next page.

Possible categories (rE decides)

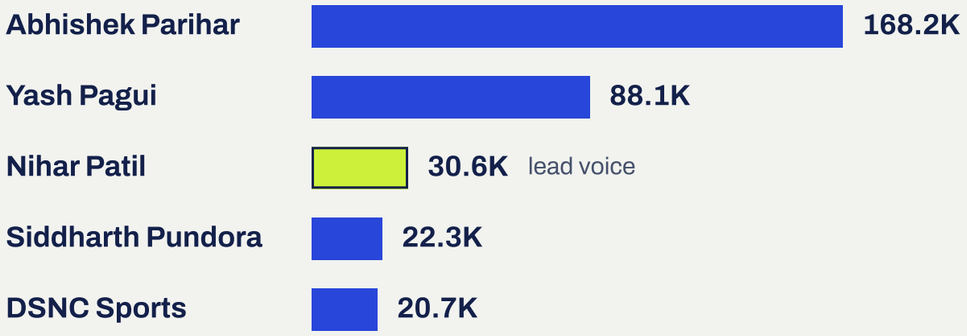

- Protein or oats
- Padel court or gym
- Sleep and wellness
- Sportswear
- Hydration

A unique link or code per partner for tracking.

LinkedIn: BSC team members post from their own profiles, partners from their own handles

Five creators from the tapped list fit the double-shift body

Instagram followers, October 2026

The lead voice isn't the biggest account. Fit with the 10-hour-day audience matters more than reach for a launch.

Creator	Why	Role
Nihar Patil	Bio: corporate, fitness and lifestyle. Closest to the lead audience.	Lead voice
Siddharth Pundora	Fitness coach	Trainer voice
DSNC Sports	Sports performance outfit	Credibility
Yash Pagui	Coach, mid-size reach	Trainer voice
Abhishek Parihar	Athletics, the largest of the five	Reach

Not in the list yet

Physios, runners and cyclists, and LinkedIn desk-work creators. That's three of the five categories in the plan, so the next round of outreach starts there.

Picked from handle, bio and category; content not yet reviewed. Counts: HypeAuditor, October 2026. Confirm in the app before outreach.

Put it where tired people already are

Concept	What it is, and where	Priority
Question hoarding	Dark, big lime “Kya comfort ek luxury hai?”, no product Metro stations, office-park roads, commuter routes	Start here
Pain-rating poster	“Rate your pain. S-tier to F-tier.” with a QR code Gyms, studios	Start here
rE:Set corner	A 10-minute guided reset by a trainer or physio Running and cycling events	Start here
Persona banner	Real working people: “Different jobs. Same body debt.” Gyms, cafés, co-working spaces	Later
Desk stickers, coasters	“4 hours sitting. Your body noticed.” with a QR code Office parks, co-working spaces	Later
Partner touchpoints	“rE x [partner]” posters or table tents Partner gyms, courts, cafés	Later

Desk coaster

Measure: a different QR code or link for every placement.

Costs: approvals and quotes first. [No figures assumed]

Creative: no product, no gun images, no medical claims.

People: real settings and hands beat posed smiles.

What to watch, from first view to repeat buyer

KPIs by stage

3-second hook rate, hold rate, shares and saves per reach

Profile visits, follower growth, site visits by source (UTM)

The main pre-launch goal. Waitlist sign-ups, sign-up rate, cost per sign-up.

Creator and partner post reach, branded search, direct traffic

Conversion rate, order value, cost per order, reviews, repeat purchase

Top-funnel media

Question	Approach
First platform	Instagram Reels, where rE's content already lives. LinkedIn through people. Test Shorts next.
Frequency	Set limits from two weeks of data. If frequency rises while hook rate and CTR fall and CPM climbs, the audience is saturated.
Overlap	Add one platform at a time. Flat unique reach and branded search means you're hitting the same people again.

Horizon	What to track
Short	Hook rate, shares, sign-ups
Medium	Branded search, direct traffic, return visits
Long	Reviews, repeat purchase, recall

Targets come from a two-week baseline of rE's own data, not assumptions

60 days to launch, then 30 days of sales

Launch

Weeks 1–2
Foundation
A bank of hook-led reels, tracking (pixel, UTM), creator and partner lists, BSC LinkedIn schedule

Weeks 3–4

Weeks 5–6
Proof
Creator content live, partner pre-launch posts, offline placements, Meta ads behind the best reels

Teaser film and cuts, countdown posts, reveal content, early-access push, launch-day plan

After launch, first 30 days
Convert and prove
Reviews engine, marketplaces and quick-commerce, retargeting, a second creator round, weekly review

Delivered in the first 7 days

Content kit	10 hook ideas, 4 reel concepts ready to shoot
Brand teaser	AI-made, with 6-second and 15-second cuts
Creator list	One or two per category, with fit notes
Partners	An outreach note and five target partners
Tracking	Pixel, UTM structure, a simple dashboard
Offline	Three concepts as mockups

Why me

I already rebuilt rE's waitlist page as a working proof of concept.

I grow audiences from zero: 75L+ views and 7.6K subscribers on my YouTube channel, 18M+ Instagram views with two reels past 5M, and a podcast past 100K views. [add links]

I work the full loop: idea, creative, testing, reading the numbers.

This plan is built from public information and independent research, and it's meant to sharpen rE's own direction, not replace it.
